

UPPSALA
UNIVERSITET

invites you to a communication supervision course

Supervising student presentations – in theory and in practice

Would you like to learn more about how you can help students improve their oral presentation skills? The purpose of the course is to give teachers insight into the process of giving and receiving feedback, as well as how to identify and evaluate different parts of an oral presentation. Methods and theories of oral communication and feedback will be introduced and discussed.

During the course, participants will practice giving concrete and direct feedback on student presentations. In addition, participants will prepare and give their own short, filmed presentations and provide each other with peer-feedback. This course is aimed at teachers, PhD-students, and researchers supervising oral presentations.

Preparations: A smaller assignment will be handed in before course start and we also like participants to read a short paper that we will discuss during the course. More information will be mailed later to registered participants.
